The Japanese occupied Tarawa just two days after the attack on Pearl Harbor. Following an August 1942 raid by U.S. Marines on Makin to deflect attention from the invasion of Guadalcanal, Japanese Imperial forces fortified the tiny islet of Betio with big guns, bunkers, pillboxes, mines and barbed wire. In November 1943, U.S. Army troops took the island of Makin, while the Marines engaged an entrenched and determined enemy on Betio. The brutal, 76-hour struggle for Tarawa resulted in more than 3,000 Marine casualties and some 5,000 Japanese dead. The hard-fought battle was the first full-scale amphibious assault against a fortified target and taught valuable lessons for the rest of the American island-hopping campaign to defeat Japan.

Clay on Tarawa

Valor Tours, Ltd. made the arrangements for a group of 50 Second Marine Division Veterans and their wives to visit Tarawa in November 1988 to dedicate their new memorial (plaque above).

Marine 1st Lt. Alexander Bonnyman, Jr. scaling a bunker where he was KIA during the battle of Tarawa on November 22, 1943. Bonnyman, center atop the makeshift ladder, was awarded the Medal of Honor. His remains have never been found along with those of many other Marines.

Clay Bonnyman Evans grew up in Colorado, with the Medal of Honor posthumously awarded to his grandfather, First Lt. Alexander Bonnyman, Jr. hanging on the wall. He worked as a cowboy around the American West for several years before graduating from college. He began his 25-year career in journalism with the Los Angeles Times and now works in communications for the Univ. of Colorado. Clay has spent time on Tarawa while JPAC was looking for remains and escorted our 70th Anniversary tour group, 2013.
